

No Reddit-like ecosystem targeted for Startups

Existing connections built between startups:

- Online community websites (ex. DC Inside, FM Korea, etc.)
 - Main problem: The UX & UI is not specified for use in business, especially for startups and investors
 - These community websites function as a multipurpose community platform
 - Lack of professionalism & industry-focused specificity
- Kakaotalk open chats or group chats
 - Most startup open chats/GCs in Kakaotalk = restricted to “100% 현직 스타트업 관계자” →
 - Since Kakaotalk also doesn't specify a service for business, the UI causes users in this industry much discomfort

단점

1. 무한대로 쌓이는 카톡으로 일일이 읽어보기 솔직히 불가능... 너무 쌓이니 스트레스만 쌓임
2. 광고와 정보가 혼재..
3. 친목질에 일부유저 소외감
4. 검색도 어렵고 정보 찾기가 어려우니 중복되는 질문 답변이 너무 많음 똑같은 내용보는거도 지겨움
5. 모든 방에 똑같은 내용을 공유하는 공유성애자가 있음.
6. 대화가 이어지지 않고 마구 쌓이면서 오해로 인한 싸움도 일어남

[Actual complaint/discomfort issued by a startup open chat user]

- A startup thread formed inside existing community websites
 - Facebook Groups: Founders share news and events to other users
 - Structure: event & announcement-based, not a real Reddit-like forum
 - Quora & Reddit: More professional than other, but the threads are filled with too many “types of content” (e.g., collaboration requests, information, quick questions, etc.) + The scope is too wide → Responses could be irrelevant in the user's region

So what?

- 차별점 in User Interface & User Experience from existing communities
- Users have different goals when uploading in a thread (marketing their company/product, asking quick questions, requesting funding/collaboration, writing for information or anecdotes, etc.).

→ A general thread formed between companies can have different sections for each of these goals

+ Needs the starting fuel to vitalize the community (초반 소비자들 유치) → What is the pull factor for the startups to feel that our website is a MUST for their company to move on to the next stage?